This is the story of Elizabeth Green of her redemption and survival. She is the sister of controversial British billionaire Sir Philip Green, she has been brought up not wanting for much, materially. But her upbringing was cold and unloving and all the attention was on Philip. Every wall in her mother's flat was covered with newspaper cuttings of her rich and successful son Philip, Sir Philip as he was knighted by the Queen in 2007. The walls in the flat made it look as if she didn't have a daughter and that's how Elizabeth felt. So she went looking for love and attention throughout her life, in London, India and New York. She thought finding a man would make her feel loved, she had many 'dalliances' with many men, and still did not feel loved. In 1975, in Poona, India she wore orange robes and sat at the feet of the guru, Bhagwan Rajneesh. (Wild Wild Country Netflix) There she fell madly in love with a leading Indian film director, who was married and had a girlfriend. She met the girlfriend. Back in London at the end of the 70s after two years with the guru she married, not happily, and had three children, her greatest achievement. But that 23-year marriage fell apart and in asking for a divorce she starts to distance herself from the family, moving to New York. She begins to see the love she wants has been inside her all this time. She writes 'Not in the Script' the book about her life, and a young American guy called Brian, comes to interview her about making the book into a movie, he becomes the narrator and commentator throughout the story, through this he takes a look at his own life and marriage.

He entered the film industry straight from school and worked in almost every technical grade from projectionist through camera and sound assistant, gofer, runner and throughout the production department on shows such as the iconic “Avengers” and as a freelance junior editor with the BBC Wednesday Play and as Unit Manager with Searchlight Films in London’s Soho who sub contracted him to the Ministry of Defence where he made Training Films for the UK military. . This took him to many countries as he went up through the grades while he grabbed every opportunity to make his own small films in more senior roles. He was spotted by his bosses who saw some potential in him and gave him very rapid promotion to major responsibility before he was 21. Presently Klinger is making the documentary “The Football Walk of Fame Film” and after which his third book, “Under God’s Table” is to be published.
